THE CHOLERA. A curious theory in regard to the cause of cholera is just now receiving much at-tention. It is that of Raspaile, who holds that snimalcule are its primary origin. It is an old theory, it is true, but none the worse, for that; and what gives it import-ance now is the fact that there is a remedy for it. In 1849-50, during the ravage of the cholera in the West Indies, it was found on examining microscopically the water of the localities where the disease existed, that it was impregnated with animalculæ foreign to the place, which disappeared simultaneously with the disease. These animalcules with the disease. These animalcular would die when placed in contact with camphor, which seemed to be to them a deadly poison. This is the evidence in support of Raspail, and a thorough microscopical investigation of the water in localities affected, and of the evacuation of a sufferer of this pestilence of the Ganges, it is evident will establish the fact that the disease is propagated by animalcule. In view of this, it is suggested that all the In view of this, it is suggested that all the water used for drinking purposes should be well boiled and kept tightly covered, for it is in the water where the greater number of animalculæ are found. We should also carefully abstain from all liquids which have not been thoroughly purified by fire. A judicious use internally of a few drops of spirits of camphor daily, destroys the animaicule as fast as they enter the system, thereby arresting the disease. Comphor is one of the remedies for cholera, as well for a preventative as for mitigation or cure of the
